DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless -

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-7 and 9 rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Stalling et al. (Stalling), U.S. Patent 5,308,481.

Stalling discloses the claimed separation device, such as the claimed chromatography device wherein the stationary phase comprises carbonaceous material, such as fullerenes, having attached at least one organic group, such as the claimed aromatic-(C_nH_{n+1}) group, where n is within the claimed range (see abstract and col. 4, lines 58-66 and figure 10b). The reference further discloses the glycol as the organic chemical attached to the carbonaceous material (see col. 9, lines 10-21). The reference further discloses the carbonaceous material can have more than one organic molecule attached (see col. 4, lines 58-62).

Accordingly, since the Stalling patent discloses each and every limitation, the claims are anticipated.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

Claim 17 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Stalling as applied to claims above, and further in view of EPA 300,448 to (Kusano).

The Stalling patent does not disclose that the organic molecule that is attached to the carbonaceous material is an amino type molecule as claimed. The Kusano reference is cited to show the use of the claimed amino type molecule used as a separation medium (see Abstract).

Consequently, the invention as a whole would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the disclosure of the Stalling patent with the teachings of the Kusano reference, because the Kusano reference teaches that the use of amino type molecules allows the use of said molecules as separation medium in chromatography.

Claims 8, 10, 16, 18-49 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Stalling as applied to claims above in view of Boes.

The Stalling patent does not disclose the specific types of chromatography nor does the Stalling patent disclose the other types of organic molecules that can be attached to the carbonaceous material as claimed.

The Boes patent is cited to show the use of a variety of organic groups that are attached to the carbonaceous material, which includes the claimed organic groups (see col. 4, line 25 to col. 5, line 22).

Consequently, the invention as a whole would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the disclosure of the Stalling patent with the teachings of the Boes patent, because the Boes patent teaches that the use of the other types of organic molecules that can be attached to carbonaceous material. Furthermore, any similar chromatography would be an obvious use of the materials disclosed by Stalling.
